Mother Hubbard's Warnings.

It was in the days of our grandmoth ers, when there were brick ovens in the land, that Mr. Hubbard bought his house the haunted house of R , very onely house. It was next to a graveyard which, though long unused, was not very cheerful, and it had the reputation of a ghost. However, Mr. Hubbard did not believe in ghosts, was too cheerful to be depressed by warnings, and never intended to be lonely.

"Mother Hubbard," he said, when his wife shook her head over the purchase, "I got the house cheap, and it's a good one. You'll like it when you get there. If you don't why then talk."

So the house was bought, and into it the Hubbard family moved. There was scarcely a chance for a ghost to show his face in such a household of boys and girls. The rosy-faced master of the house and his little wife had ten of them. It was in view of the eternal cry of 'moth er" that the jolly husband had dubbed his Martha Jane "Mother Hubbard," using it in jest at first, and at last, be-cause of an old habit. Hearing it, the Mother Hubbard turned them up on their sides as she drew them forth, and they stood in the long bread-tray, glo-rious proofs of her skill, and of the ex-so that it was more her name by far than her baptismal Martha Jane. Having once expostulated and "spoken out her mind," Mother Hubbard gave up the point. She scrubbed and scoured, tacked down carpets and put up cur-tains, and owned that the place was pretty, and as not a ghost appeared for a week, made up her mind that there was no such inhabitant, and even began not to mind the tombstones. So the house was got to rights at last, and baking day came about. In the press of business they had had a great deal of baker's bread, and were tired of it. Mrs. Hubbard never enjoyed setting a batch of bread to rise as she did that which was to be eaten for the first time "For I can't get up an appetite for stuff that nobody knows who has had the making of," said Mother Hubbard, So into the oven went the bread, and > silence. Mother Hubbard broke it. "Father." she said. "the first thing you do, get a new bottom to that oven." And the tone assured the assemblage of friends that Mother Hubbard was not going to die just then. Indeed, she sat up the very next day, and as soon as the oven was rebottomed invited every body to a tea-drinking, at which no one discovered awful warnings on the bread, or ghostly printings on the ginger-cake.
